

IN MEMORIAM.

Mrs. Catherine T. Jackson, Died April 18th, 1894.
Written for the ARGUS and MUNICIPAL at the request of friends.

"When the good man dies
Nature feels the drain."

So wrote a man who was born and dwelt among us, and of whom Stedman speaks as one of our sweetest minstrels.

It is peculiarly fitting that those words of his should head what we have to say of this remarkable woman who was a member of the same family and who has passed on out of our midst into a fuller enjoyment of that unseen life, which for long years was more real to her through the vitality of her faith than is his visible world to many who move in it to-day.

One after one she parted from those she loved, it was only in a manner to follow them across the border line of the unseen and so establish more firmly her relations with all that is eternal and desirable both in this world and the next. Her character took on in course of time, a contemplative tinge, which greatly enriched it. When as a widow, she said that son,—whom so many of you still love, Captain William A. Jackson, in his grave, it was with a sorrow the keenness of which only those who knew him could understand. Her only daughter, Jeanie Moore, had already gone, in the flush of a beautiful womanhood, and with all the struggle of a tender, loving heart against the motherhood sense of duty she had given this boy to his country—only to have him brought back to her dead—shot down on the field at Petersburg.

It is true he was but one of five sons then living; men of unblemished characters and all positive elements for good wherever they were found. But she had given to this son, so capable of entwining himself with the deepest affections of his comrades, only that same keen separability which fed the roots of her own being. When he died, part of her life went with him—and ever after as time after time she laid the semblance of her friends away,—her sisters and her sons,—it was with such a living sense that they had but returned to God, who made and loved them, that at last she grew to say, "I have more beyond than here, let me go, too."

And yet there never was a more busy, practical, sunny, loving woman than she remained until within two years of her departure. Those same qualities of mind and heart which, as a girl, made her one of the leading spirits at the Litchfield school in Connecticut, where she was for two years desk mate and friend of Mrs. Stowe, then plain Harriet Beecher, were as active in old age as in youth.

About twenty years ago, Henry Ward Beecher was lecturing in this neighborhood and Mrs. Jackson went to hear him. He was delighted to meet again his sister's friend. "And do you," he said to her, "remember now in signet you were when I, a boy of ten, was promoted to the grammar class you led, as best scholar?" "Indeed I do," she said, "I was so afraid you would lower its tone."

Heartily they laughed together over those days, and it was with a keen sense of humor. Mrs. Jackson afterwards told of how, on her return from school, her prudent and thrifty mother forbade correspondence between Harriet and herself, "because Miss Beecher's letters were not worth the shilling postage that in those days the recipient was required to pay."

When her first husband, Mr. Moore, died, she took her two little children, Alexander and Jennie, and through the patronage of her friends opened and for years maintained a flourishing boarding school in New York city.

An old colored man, still living, who was born in slavery and afterwards served among the connections of the family, tells how he was once sent down from home in charge of some darling pupils, who foretold him into taking them surreptitiously to the theatre before committing them to school and Mrs. Moore's care. This story is not, of course, to be credited, for a moment. The school grew and flourished and Mrs. Moore was more than content in the pleasures of intellectual life.

Then it was that Mr. William Wickham Jackson presented his suit, and she accepted him as her husband. He was then a widower, with one son, Richard C. Jackson, who, with his wife, stood with the other surviving sons, beside her grave the other day.

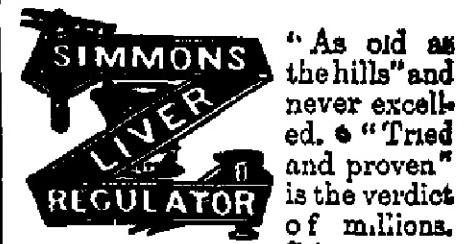

It is to Richard Jackson that our present system of railway mail service is largely due. He has devised

PROBABLE MURDER IN NEWBURGH.

Burglars Surprised at Their Work Shoot Grocer Frank Henderson—A Description of the Men.

At 8 o'clock this morning, Frank Henderson, a Newburgh grocer, who lived over his store, was awakened by a noise in the room below, and on going downstairs, found three men in the store. He grappled with one of the men and the others jumped through an open window and escaped.

Henderson's father, who lived with him, hearing the noise of the struggle, went down stairs just in time to see the burglar pull a revolver and shoot his son, and then make his escape through the window.

An alarm was given and the police and physicians were soon on the scene.

It was found that the ball had entered Mr. Henderson's throat on the left side, and passing through the neck, came out under the right ear.

Henderson was still unconscious at 4 o'clock this morning and the physicians were unable to determine the full extent of his injuries, but it is feared that they are fatal.

The three men, when they left the store, ran towards the Quassaic bridge and were soon lost in the darkness.

The following telegram was received by Captain Grier, this morning:

NEWBURGH, April 23, 4:25 A. M.
To Chief of Police.

Arrest was about six feet, six inches, dark suit of clothes, sash curaway coat, soft hat. About 165 pounds. He may be cut on hands of face, or bruised on the face. He was knocked through a window. Charge burglary and attempted murder. Two other men with him, medium build, wore soft hats and dark cloths.

Jas. H. Savitt, Chief of Police.

An officer from Newburgh, arrived in town, this morning, and went to the Summit, where he arrested a man on suspicion, but the prisoner was able to establish the fact that he slept last night, in Middletown.

Another arrest was made by Mr. Remer and Patrick Doyle, at Eight-and-a-Half Station, this afternoon, but the man had been brought to town, at this writing. It is not believed, however, that he is one of the men wanted in Newburgh.

THE RECORDER'S BUSY MORNING.

Four Bad Boys and a Thieving Italian at the Bar of Justice—The Boys Sent to Rensselaer Island and the Italian to Albany Penitentiary.

Justice A. V. N. Powelson, acting Recorder in the absence of Recorder Bradner, had a busy morning. Four young boys were before him on various charges. Two of them he sent to the House of Refuge, one was released on bail for further examination, and one was fined three dollars.

Mrs. Sarah C. Winters, of the Children's Home, lodged a complaint against Charles Eagan, aged fourteen years and Emmet Russell, aged ten years, inmates of the Home, charging them with being disobedient and vicious, and with running away from the institution. She alleged that she was unable to control them, and asked that they be arrested and dealt with according to law. Eagan plead guilty, and was sent to the House of Refuge on Randall's Island.

Young Russell was committed to the Home several years ago when his mother died. He was subsequently indentured to a farmer near Warwick, from whom he ran away, coming back to this city to live with an elder brother and sister, who had established a home here. He wants to remain with relatives, and pending an investigation of the case, the boy was released on $100 bail for an examination next Wednesday at 10 o'clock.

Joseph Grudzinski, Jr., aged thirteen was sent to the House of Refuge on complaint of his father, who claimed that he was unable to control him. Joe and ten-year-old Jimmy Doyle, were detected yesterday, in the act of stealing oranges from the Press office's peanut annex.

Doyle also pleaded guilty, and was fined three dollars which his mother paid. Grudzinski has been in trouble several times, and his father was willing that he should be sent away.

John Menders, aged thirty-five, an Italian, was sentenced to six months imprisonment, at hard labor in Albany penitentiary, this morning, for stealing a stick of timber from the premises of Mr. John D. Rockafellar.

The man had long been suspected of various petty thefts, and about four o'clock this morning, Officer Wood caught him in the act mentioned. John remarked as he passed out of the court room, "ten years does just as good."

SHOTS HERE AND THERE.

AN "ARGUS" MAN OFF DUTY AIMS AT SEVERAL SUBJECTS.

Not a Bad Way of Cheating a Husband —
—Den the Sweet Pea—Women's Opposition to Woman Suffrage and a Woman's Comment thereon.

Mario Annal Fattorosi, an Italian widow with a son, fortune, who was married, yesterday, at Derby, Conn., took a novel yet very practical and very sensible method of deciding between two suitors for her hand. They were all so desirable or undesirable that her heart could not tell her which would make her most happy, so she set them at work spading up her garden, agreeing to wed the one who did the best work. The rivals spaded and raked from dawn till night, and after a critical examination, the widow decided that a comely young fellow named Marguella had made the best job and to him she gave her hand in wedlock, satisfied that even if he proved a poor husband he was at least a good gardener, so that there was no risk of her drawing a blank in the lottery of marriage.

The sweet pea is one of the prettiest of flowers and is constantly growing in favor, and they are to be seen in nearly all flower gardens. A resident of Louisville, Ky., has discovered, however, that they are useful as well as ornamental, and their utility will give them a stronger hold upon the housewife when she learns that they are "the greatest fly trap on earth," as the Kuckuckian puts it. The discovery was made in a music store where a bunch of sweet pea blossoms had been thrown upon a piano. Soon a large number of dead flies were found near it, and, watching for a moment, the gentleman saw that the flies were attracted by the sweet odor of the flowers and stopped to sip the deadly nectar and in a moment would topple over dead. There are few flowers better worth cultivating than sweet peas, and even if they do not prove as deadly killers as this Kentucky story makes them out to be, their beauty and fragrance will more than recompense for the little time and care that it is necessary to devote to them.

It is remarked as a most curious circumstance that since the present agitation for woman suffrage began in New York city, nearly all the speeches that have been made by men in opposition to the movement have been made by clergymen. Their arguments are all in the same line,—that politics are so corrupt that the ballot is in the hands of women could not possibly make them better, and the only effect would be to lower women from the high plane they now occupy. A bright woman, who harangued a drawing room meeting, yesterday, referring to the hostility of clergymen to woman suffrage said that while it was to be regretted that any set of men should array themselves against the movement of the age, she knew of no class of men whose opposition could do the cause of equal suffrage less harm than the opposition of clergymen. She then went on to say that most clergymen, when they assumed to discuss topics of current interest generalized from insufficient premises, rarely looked at matters calmly and dispassionately, but allowed their biases to be influenced by sympathy or prejudice and so often arrived at absurd and impossible conclusions and preferred absurd and impracticable advice, at the majority of men would not listen, but half listened to what they said. The fan speaker having disposed of the clergymen and their opposition to equal suffrage ought to have stopped, but did not, of course, so the weakened heretics by a very natural and very common but rather illogical argument, which struck of the bestial ignorance, was that if it wasn't for women line out of ten, churches would have to shut up, and their priests go into the ranks of the army and that, since you were the real supporters of abolition, it was a real means for clerical control.

SHOTS EXCHANGED IN COURT.

Patrick J. McArdle, formerly of Newburgh, shot at his brother-in-law.

Yesterday morning, immediately after Judge Buschhoff of the Common Pleas Court, in New York, had dismissed a suit of Michael Donnelly against Patrick J. McArdle, Donnelly pulled a revolver from his pocket and fired at McArdle. The ball did not hit anyone, although there were twenty-five people in the court room.

McArdle's son then whipped out a revolver and fired at Donnelly and the latter again fired, but some one knocked his hand and the ball struck the ceiling. Donnelly was then arrested and taken before a police justice and released on $5,000 bail.

Donnelly and McArdle were in partnership in the junk business in New York, and the former claims that the latter owes him $79,000, and brought suit for that amount.

Donnelly and McArdle were boys together in Ireland and married sisters. McArdle was for several years engaged in the junk business in Newburgh, but a few years ago removed to Albany.

A COSTLY BLUNDER.

It will necessitate buying a new boiler for Goshen jail.

From Independent Republic.

Meers Sayer, Adams and Durand, to compose the Supervisors' Committee on Public Buildings, visited the Goshen jail Saturday, and inspected the boiler. Through a blunder on the part of the designer of that building, the boiler was placed in the cellar at a depth so low that water flows constantly into the pit in which it rests. While fires are kept going this water is evaporated and causes little or no trouble, but during warm weather the pit is full of water all the time and as a result the boiler has been irreparably damaged by rust. The committee decided to erect a boiler house between the court house and jail and procure a new boiler of ample capacity to heat the county buildings.

Improvements at the Academy Avenue Park.

Park Commissioner Joseph H. King has done much good work at the Academy Park, in the way of seeding, fertilizing and planting trees. If he is given crushed stone for the walks, and a few nice shrubs, he will make of the park a beauty spot of which the city may well be proud. Give Commissioners Minshall and King the encouragement they deserve and Middletown will have two fine parks.

A Surprise Party.

About twenty five of the young friends of Miss Helen Horton gave her a pleasant surprise, last night, at her home on Academy avenue. The evening was spent in listening to music and in amusements of various kinds and the time passed so pleasantly that it was a late hour when the company broke up.

The Erie Passenger Equipment.

It requires 1,065 locomotives to run the Erie road. This company also has 355 passenger coaches, 16 baggage cars, 121 combined passenger and baggage cars, 9 baggage and mail cars, 3 mail and express cars, 24 baggage and express cars, 32 mile cars and 7 postal cars, or a total of 501 cars in the passenger and allied services alone.

To Take a Spin Down the Delaware.

Mr. B. F. Gordon went to Port Jervis on Friday, this morning. He took his bicycle with him, intending to ride down the banks of the Delaware from Port Jervis to Stroudsburg, Pa., and return.
